Story of the Collision by a "World" Man on Board.

Opinious of Seagoing Experts Indorse the Trave's Course.

The publication in TRE WORLD this morning of the details of the collision between the North German Lloyd steamship Trave and the ship Frederick B. Taylor, as written by a World reporter who was a passenger on the Trave, turnished New York readers the first complete account of the collision and the circumstances attending it.

The fact that the steamship's first officer deliberately ran the Tlave into the Tayat full speed, claiming that if had reduced speed the Trave might have become tangled in the wreck has raised a technical question of supreme importance to marines and of great interest to Agent McMillan, of the Lloyd line (not the German-Lloyd line), held the same view as expressed by Capt. Taylor. "I was on toard the steamer Nile when just such an accident as the collision of the Trave and Taylor occurred. The officer was one of those fellows who always knows what to do in a emergency, and when he saw that a collision was unavoidable, he signalied for a full head of steam and cus through a barge so nicely that the passengers thought we had simply run into a big wave. If we had been going slowly the Nile might have stopped in the; wreck and the chances are that before she could have got loose from it, the tossing of the waves would have damaged the sides of the Nile.
